COURSE DESCRIPTION:

The main text, Harris' Cultural Anthropology, provides a general sequence of topics for organizing the course. Three predominant themes are:

- (1) The relationship between anthropological theory and the practice of ethnography and applied anthropology;
- (2) research methods in cultural anthropology and ethnology
- (3) the current theoretical perspectives in cultural anthropology - cultural materialism and symbolic anthropology

COURSE OBJECTIVES:

As an expansion of one of the sub-disciplines of anthropology, namely Social and Cultural Anthropology, this course attempts to broaden students' understanding and appreciation of human cultural diversity. It is hoped that this course will stimulate students to:

- (1) understand how culture shapes the way humans feel, behave, and perceive the world
- (2) expand on their repertoire of terms, methods, and theories used in anthropology
- (3) acquire a more objective understanding of their own culture, society, and lives
- (4) appreciate the cultural diversity and range of cultural values that exist
- (5) discover practical applications of anthropology
- (6) read and analyze with a critical perspective
- (7) explore interests further through individual study

The readings provide a general background for an understanding of the lectures. Lectures will not duplicate readings, but will expand upon reading assignments. Students should do readings prior to class to enable them to contribute and gain more from in-class discussion.
