COURSE DESCRIPTION:

This course is designed to provide the students with information about a selected cross section of handicapping conditions. Emphasis is placed on:

1. Providing students with information on the definitions, etiology, physical and learning characteristics associated with each disability studied.
2. Providing students with information on the possible social and educational implications associated with each disability.

TEXT:

Turnbull, A., Turnbull, H.R., Shank, M., and Leal, D. (1995). Exceptional lives: Special education in today's schools. Columbus, OH; Prentice-hall, Inc.

CLASS FORMAT:

Classes will consist of lectures, films, activities, discussions, and guest speakers.

COURSE OBJECTIVES:

1. Students will identify major issues and themes in service delivery in relationship to persons with disabilities.
 2. Students will demonstrate a knowledge of etiology and terminology associated with the disabilities studied.
 3. Students will demonstrate a knowledge of possible physical and psychological characteristics of a person who has a certain disability.
 4. Students will recognize that the handicapping effect resulting from the disability is a relationship between one's needs and access to the resources that meet those needs, e.g., social, educational, physical and family.
-  Attainment of objectives will be determined by tests and assignments.

GRADING:

Marks will be assigned for this course as follows:

- 25% exam 1
